What are filters and how are they used?

Essentially, filters are screens made of various materials including paper, string, charcoal, sand, clay, silver, and even membranes. In rainwater catchment systems, filters take particles out of your water.

What do filters do and how are they used on my catchment system?

Filters are used in various locations for a variety of reasons. Typically, a home would have a screen filter before the tank, a sediment filter after the pump and maybe a fine filter at the sink. If they have water treatment systems, they may have more filters. The following are common:
